On Tuesday, two days after Senate Republicans blocked a bill that would have increased funding for breast and cervical cancer screening, Rep. Ron Kind (D-Wis.) said he was "profoundly disturbed" by the death of his son's newborn daughter. Two weeks later, he wrote a letter to the doctors of Planned Parenthood, asking them to continue supporting cancer screenings. The bill failed because Republicans prioritized organization lobbying against the legislation. "That's their strategy," Kind told Mother Jones. "I think it's an abject betrayal of [the Republican Platform's] opposition to abortion." What Kind's letter says The letter was issued on the morning of Oct. 10, the day after the defeat of the breast and cervical cancer funding bill. In it, Kind acknowledges that the fight to give women more funds for prevention is far from over: Dear Dr. Smith and team, We have watched in horror as the United States Congress has failed in its responsibility to improve our health care system. As mother, father, physician, and combat veteran, I find it profoundly disturbing that our Congress cannot invest funds to better prevent premature death. I want to express my outrage that we, as a society, are unable to recognize that every one of us has the right to the best health care in the world that is accessible to all. I cannot imagine a more basic right than our right to the health of our families and the communities we live in. None of us can bear to think of our loved ones suffering from preventable disease and early death. None of us can bear to think of our fellow Americans not living their lives to their fullest potential. We recognize this problem; we believe it is an c6a93da74d
