ibn khaldun, whose full name was abu muhammad ibn abd al-rahman ibn ahmad ibn muhammad ibn khaldun (arabic: إِبْنُ خَالِدُونَ يَرْمَعَانُ ابْنُ مُحَمَّدٍ خَالِدِ بْنِ عَبْدِ أَوْبَامٍ), ibn khaldun wrote a series of notebooks, which were later translated into the arabic language and subsequently spread throughout the muslim world and beyond. the notebooks are often referred to as the "thousand and one nights," a reference to the story of scheherazade, the female protagonist of the story. ibn khaldun's, essential historical works are: kitab umam (society), kitab al muqaddama ('introduction to historical studies' or 'introduction to statecraft') and kitab al-muqaddima ('the muqaddimah' or 'introduction'), which set forth the theory of history, political ecology, and ethnography. the book was written by the 'thousand and one nights' figure scheherazade. the story begins with a girl named scheherazade who is married to the caliph king shahryar of persia. she later tricks the sultan to grant her three wishes. in exchange for her second wish of a night of unlimited time, she tells her third wish, which is that she would tell the sultan all about history. the sultan, concerned for the preservation of his reign, commands that she be kept alive at the expense of the lives of her 1,001 brothers. when she asks her father to intercede on their behalf and place them in a safe country, he tells her that it cannot be done. the story then continues with the sultan's death and his succession by his twelve sons, the alternate stories of the lives of the princes. at the end of the 1000 nights, the reader has learned that the lot of the princes will be based on the character of the sultan who governed them. each prince will interpret the sultan's legacy differently, and the reader is provided with many details of the lives of these princes as they each take power in turn.
