In an effort to streamline the process for obtaining permits, Amendment Thirty-two to the Portland City Charter has passed. This measure will allow the city to automatically approve commercial development proposals that include housing without requiring a public hearing. Amendment Thirty-two will take effect immediately. When the City adopted Plan 2020, it stated that the goal was to maintain housing in Portland. Though Amendment Twenty-five, which created the Multifamily Housing Plan and the Portland 2035 Residential Growth Guidelines, had made it illegal to rezone housing units without public notice and participation, the City has been allowing developers to rezone up to sixty units to a single family residence, a change in the form of housing that is similar to a rezoning. To further that policy, the City of Portland has in the past allowed over two dozen single family rezones to pass without any public notice or comment. This practice led to high rates of speculation and weakening the neighborhood. Some have criticized the ordinance, saying that it was unfair to the buyer who must purchase a family home even if it was rezoned. However, in many instances, the buyer was unaware that they were purchasing a family home, believing that they were purchasing a single family. Portland today has well-designed and fully completed infill housing, preserving the look and feel of the area while accommodating denser development. Many of these infill developments are single family homes that
